Manhattan's NoMad neighborhood (short for North of Madison Square Park) has steadily become a NYC hotspot. Roughly between 24th and 30th streets and Sixth to Madison avenues, the area has plenty of restaurants and shops and is within walking distance of Big Apple attractions like the Empire State Building, Macy's, Times Square and the Flatiron Building. There are also a growing number of hip hotels.

One of NoMad's newest hotels is actually located within a historic Beaux Arts building on 27th Street designed by architect William Birkmire at the turn of the century. And the rooms are a blend of traditional and modern accents—exposed brick walls and Bigelow amenities alongside sleek furnishings and wall-mounted flatscreens.
